Arsenic and Old Lace (Directed by Francis J. Silva)

Production note: "I do not recall the names of the characters in the play itself, but I can describe what Juniors had the principal roles. Joe Powers and Jim Felt were the two sweet, murderous, elderly ladies. Hugh Gray had the role of the hero, the young man played by Cary Grant in the movie. Jim Dempsey was the menacing heavy played by Raymond Massey, and Clem Kennedy was his side-kick (Peter Lorre in the movie). I had the part of the nut, "Teddy", who thought he was Theodore Roosevelt."—E.L. Burke.

Production note: "The play listed as "Number Please" on Aug. 15, 1946 was originally a play entitled "Whistling in the Dark". I'm not sure precisely why we renamed it, but I do remember that the play involved some special effects involving a telephone call and that the telephone didn't work during the performance, which forced Clem Kennedy and Ed Stackpoole to engage in some extended adlibbing. I was co-director with Bill Finnegan on the play, and that evening he was sitting out in the audience as rector enjoying the play, while I was backstage sweating the special effects."—E.L. Burke.
